Their advent to humans and the consequent reliance on their companionship, along with their adaptability to a variety of habitats has resulted in a huge range of the genome. Since some morphological or biochemical traits are correlated with variation in the mitochondrial genome, we sequenced mitochondrial genomes from 40 Canis familiaris samples sampled from five continents. Most of the analyzed dogs have been previously classified, using standard analyses, as Siberian wolf/Alaskan husky-type dogs. However, by means of a combination of phylogenetic and statistical analyses and numerical data, we detect significant differences among domestic populations. Our data suggest that the siberian wolf/Alaskan husky-type dogs have been under human selection. We also found a significant correlation between the nucleotide diversity of the mitogenome and the age of samples. 'It was not until after he left that we found out the reason, and we all thought it was just an admin error,' The Irish Examiner reported that the reason for the delay was that he had a lot of luggage and it was not possible to place the extra weight in the hold.' The source added: 'He's so busy trying to make things happen it's hard for him to worry about the little things.' He went off to the ring happy to be in Belfast to see his mother, and didn't really seem fazed by the delay. 'But in the end, he was so used to being on time that the entire delay didn't phase him. 'We can understand why he was a bit tired after the fight, but no one thought this would be an issue. 'It's hard to explain to outsiders how he deals with everything.
